1. Before they are permitted to land, Chinese merchants who travel by ship from Nationalist controlled ports to the Kuantung Peninsula must produce citizen identification certificates issued by the Chinese National Government, or travel visas or business permits issued by the Chinese Communist authorities. The citizen identification certificates issued by the Chinese National Government are accepted by the Chinese Communist authorities as proof that the bearers are bonafide merchants ( [REDACTED] ).
2. Immediately after arrival, travelers must register with the local census bureau. and obtain temporary Kuantung citizen identification certificates. Persons who do not register are liable to arrest if discovered, unless three businessmen act as guarantors.
3. All persons with Kuantung permanent or temporary citizen identification certificates are free to travel within the Kuantung Peninsula. However, if they intend to remain overnight in another city, they are required to secure temporary lodging permits from the authorities of the city in which they reside.
4. In order to enter Soviet fortified and naval base areas Chinese must have identification papers proving they are employed by the Soviets. However, coolies and peddlers selling such items as candy, cigarettes and fruit are usually permitted to pass without identification papers.
5. Before a permanent resident of the Kuantung Peninsula can leave the area on business, three shopkeepers must act as his guarantors. He must return within a specified period. If he does not return within the period, the guarantors are liable to arrest.
